Freeview (Australia)

Channels

Since 2009, each commercial free-to-air broadcaster has been permitted to transmit two channels in Standard Definition (SD) and one in High Definition (HD). Restrictions on the number of multi-channels permitted by commercial broadcasters will end after digital switchover. The public broadcasters - ABC and SBS - are not subject to multichannelling restrictions.

Channel numbers

The digital television standard allows for multiple channel numbers to point to the same television stream. All the broadcasters use this - it can appear that there are several separate channels when they each point to the same transmission.

The commercial broadcasters are permitted to broadcast three separate channels. When the HD and SD channels show the same program, they use different streams - one in standard-definition, the other in high-definition.

Channel table

Not all channels are available in all areas, duplicate channel numbers listed in notes Commercial channels are assigned separate LCNs in regional areas to metro areas, government owned channels have the same LCN nationwide.

Notes:

1. Metro refers to urban, suburban and greater parts of Melbourne, Sydney, Perth, Adelaide and Brisbane only. (It does not include Canberra, Darwin, Hobart, or the large regional cities.)

2. Regional includes most other areas outside of the larger state captials, with the following exceptions:

- In Griffith the commercial multichannels are not yet broadcast.
- In Regional Western Australia, and Regional South Australia not all multichannels are available in all locations.
- In Remote Central and Eastern Australia the Freeview range of channels is almost exclusively delivered by the VAST satellite platform.

3. For more commercial TV licensing information, see Television broadcasting in Australia.
